The home of Judge Charles C. Nott of the Court of General Sesslons, who sentenced two anarchists to Sing Sing Prison in April, 1915, was so thoroughly torn up by the explosion of a bomb at 12.52 o'clock this morning that it is certain the bomb used was one of the largest and most powerful ever set off in this city. Judge Nott's home is at No. 151

William Boehner, No. 871 Brook Avenue, a night watchman, was blown to pieces by the explosion and, peculiarly enough, his scalp was detached from his head and found across the street, as was the case with the anarchis; who set off the bomb at the home of Attorney General Palmer in Washington, with fatal consequences to himself.

H. S. Thompson of the United States District Court and Lucien Tyng, No. 138 East 65th Street, and finding her completely recovered from the shock produced by the explosion, walked around to his wrecked dwelling. Before entering he made the following statement: NOT A PERSONAL ATTACK.

> "I do not consider this a personal attack on me but a preconcerted effort on the part of the Bolshevists, I. W. W. and associated radical organizations to terrorize the judiciary and the upholders of law and order in this country. I have received no threatening letters since I left the District Attorney's office ten years ago,
